Burning of Villages and Forests.

On Sunday night last Mr. James B. Clark, of Detroit, was in Uniontown, Wisconsin. Fires were blazing through the forests and along the prairies in every direction. At sundown there was a strong breeze, which at 9 o'clock increased to a furious gale, blowing toward the lake. The whole surface of the country to the westward, eastward, and southward seemed to be one mass of flame, which almost reached to the lowering clouds, and rushed along at race-horse speed. Even where Mr. Clark was the heat was intense. Beyond, toward the lake, was the settlement of Williamson's Mills, comprising about fourteen families. The fire suddenly made a rush, like the flash of a train of gunpowder, and swept in the shape of a crescent around the settlement. It is almost impossible to conceive the frightful rapidity of the advance of the flames. The rushing fire seemed to eat up and annihilate the trees.

The roar of the blast was as loud as the whirr of a great mill. As we looked on, say at about 10 o'clock, we heard another strange sound—straining our eyes toward the fire—about seven miles distant—we could just discern something moving; now it would separate into fragments, swaying to and fro, and bobbing up and down. It came toward us directly from the lurid wall of flames. So intense was the glare of light all about us that our eyes were dazzled; they ran with water, and we could see only by constantly using our handkerchiefs. At last we made out by sight and sound that the moving mass was a stampede of cattle and horses thundering along toward us away from the flames, bellowing, neighing, and moaning as they galloped on. Finally they came rushing past with fearful speed, their eyeballs dilated and glaring with terror, and every motion betokening delirium of fright. Some had been badly burned and must have plunged through a long space of flame in the desperate effort to escape.

Following considerably behind came a solitary horse, panting and snorting and nearly exhausted. He was saddled and bridled, and, as we first thought, had a bag slung to his back. As he came up we were startled to find the sight of a young lad lying fallen over the animal's neck, the bridle wound around his hands, and the mane being clinched by the fingers. Little effort was needed to stop the jaded horse and at once release the helpless boy. He was taken into the house, and all that we could do was to see that he inhaled the smoke, and was seemingly dying. Some time elapsed, and he revived enough to speak. He told his name, Patrick Byrnes, and said:

"Father and mother and the children got into the wagon. I don't know what became of them. Everything is burned up. I am dying. Oh, is hell any worse than this?"

The poor fellow lay in a critical condition when I left. The next morning we drove down to the settlement. The first house we came to was that of Patrick Byrnes, father of the lad before spoken of. It was a heap of ashes. The brick chimney, the cooking stove, and iron portions of farm tools were the only remnants of the place. The forest was burnt down close to the ground, the stumps being left, smouldering and smoking. Everything was hot. Even the road was baked and cracked by the heat.

About a mile further on we came to a horrible spectacle. Alongside the road in a gully lay the bodies of six persons and two horses, roasted to a crisp. The iron tires of the wheels and braces and bolts of the wagon were scattered about. Here the fire had surrounded and engulfed them. Evidently the animals, in their mad struggles, had reared, plunged, and fallen headlong from the road to where they died.

Mr. Byrnes was a native of Tipperary county, Ireland, and with his wife had been in America over thirty years. Formerly they lived in the Fourth Ward of New York, where he was employed as a cartman. Seventeen years ago he moved West, and by industry had accumulated a snug property. He had five children, the eldest being eighteen and the youngest five years old.

We hurried on. All along the road lay the carcasses of cattle, sheep, hogs, and dogs, burnt to a crisp. The smaller animals were almost entirely consumed. Now we came to the village. Nothing was left but piles of ashes, smoking and smouldering. In the cellar of one house were found eight bodies. One of a man was in a stooping position over that of a child, as though he died trying to ward off the flames. This was very likely the body of Mr. Williamson, the owner of the mills, who, with his entire family, is said to have perished. In the rear yard of the next house were four bodies, apparently those of a mother and her children. They were scorched, not burnt crisp, and one cheek of the youngest, a girl of six, retained an expression of calmness that seemed to indicate a painless death by suffocation.

But the most horrible of all was at Boorman's well. Mr. Boorman's house was the largest in the village, and in the center of the yard, midway between the house and barn, was a large but shallow well. Several of the neighbors were supplied with water from this fountain, and it is likely that in the conflagration, when all hope was out of the neighbors, in some with terror, thronged with one purpose to this well. The ordinary chain and wheel pump used in that place had been removed, and the wretched people had leaped into the well as the last refuge. Boards had been thrown down to prevent them being drowned; but evidently the relentless fury of the fire drove them pell-mell into the pit to struggle with each other and die—some by drowning, and others by fire and suffocation. None escaped.

Two bodies were found there. They were in very imaginable position; but the contortions of their limbs and the agonized expressions of their faces told the awful tale.

All the houses along the roads down to Starvation bay were reduced to ashes, and in them, or near by, were the blackened corpses of the ill-fated residents. Twelve only are as yet known to have escaped. These ran to the lake and plunged to their necks in the water.

SIMMONS' LIVER
The symptoms of Liver Complaint are uneasiness and pain in the side. Sometimes the pain is in the shoulder, and is mistaken for rheumatism. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness, bowels in general constipated, sometimes alternating with laxity.

The liver is troubled with pain, and dull, heavy sensation, considerable loss of memory, accompanied with painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. Often complaining of weakness, debility and low spirits. Sometimes many of the above symptoms attend the disease, and at other times very few of them; but the liver is generally the organ most involved. Cures the liver with

THE FOLLOWING WILL BE READ WITH INTEREST:
Under date of April 26th, 1871, Dr. HENRY J. ROGERS, 68 Sharp street, Baltimore, an eminent physician, writes regarding

CRYSTAL DISCOVERY:
"It affords me much pleasure to bear testimony to the efficacy of your Crystal Discovery. Some years since, while in India, I suffered from a severe fever peculiar to the country. On my recovery, a patch of hair on the left side of my head became perfectly white, without at all affecting the remainder. To remove this unsightly appearance, I had recourse to various preparations, both in Europe and in this country; but they all had one great defect—they dyed the hair black. Now, with your Crystal Discovery, I can get the desired shade—the natural color of my hair being dark brown. I consider your Crystal Discovery the best preparation I know of.
Yours truly,
HENRY J. ROGERS.

Now as this fact becomes more patent every day that the various dirty and filthy preparations advertised as Restoratives, &c., are but compounds of Sugar of Lead and Sulphur, and therefore should be shunned by all who value their health, it is scarcely a matter of surprise that the demand for NATTANS' CRYSTAL DISCOVERY, admitted to be perfectly harmless, and yet accomplish all, and more, than the poisonous articles claim to do, should have increased so rapidly. It restores the color and growth of the hair positively in a few days; strengthens the roots, makes an excellent dressing, selling neither clothes nor scalp; but on the contrary it gives the scalp a pure and cleanly look, removing all dandruff and scurf. It is the most economical preparation in use. Put up in large bottles, one dollar.
